Dear Mr. Dusseldorp:

Thank you for your time and for your consideration at our first meeting last Friday. I trust that as you experiment with new ways of organising new types of projects, you will seriously consider the possibility of trying out some of the techniques we discussed.

By mid-February next year, I expect to have completed several project-planning contracts under Sydney and Canberra conditions and would then be able to demonstrate more precisely the extent and nature of these services as well as their potential value to yourself.

I remain

Yours faithfully

George Clarke.
