Dear Mr Leonard:

It's now about six months since my departure from N.Y. and the family affairs I had to arrange are now set in order.

I'm writing now to ask if you will have a useful place for me in your team in the near future, according to the informal arrangement we made before I left the office.

Australia is undergoing unprecedented expansion, especially in all forms of urban development; there's no shortage of opportunity here, except of opportunity for work at the very highest standards of planning, urban design and architecture, such as is produced by your office. Because of this, I would very seriously consider any chance you might be able to offer me of re-joining the Webb and Knapp organisation.

Sincerely yours,

George Clarke
