LAND AND BUILDING DEVELOPERS

and all who will benefit from an understanding of current theory and practice in urban and regional planning and development.

Town Planning is a relatively new profession, but its influence has grown very rapidly in recent years. Planning legislation throughout Australasia makes it essential that all concerned with building and land development should understand the principles which govern town planning policies and administration.

The Australian Planning Institute Journal is the focus of Australia-wide discussion of plans and planning. It is the most authoritative journal in Australasia on matters of city and regional development.

It embraces discussion of all aspects of development planning, from relatively small land-use problems such as the best use of a particular block of land, or the subdivision of a housing estate, through to larger schemes of far-reaching significance, such as urban renewal projects, regional shopping centres, highways and expressways, the location of industrial estates, green belts and the planning of satellite towns. It also presents details of both State and Federal development schemes and projects.

The Australian Planning Institute Journal contains:

Original papers and articles by both Australian and overseas authorities and experts.

Reports on important legal judgments in the field of planning, and new developments in planning law and administration in all States of the Commonwealth and New Zealand.

News of Institute activities.

Book reviews and notes on relevant new literature.

Notices of meetings, symposia and congresses.
